

Temple University
Global Programs
for International Students

Temple students in the Spirit of India dance group participate in the biennial Celebration of Globalization hosted by International Affairs.

“I like that Temple is in a big city. You are in Center City within five minutes via subway. I think such a big city offers so many different opportunities. There wasn’t one day that I found myself not knowing what to do. There’s always something to discover.”

Global Programs

At Temple University, Global Programs consists of the Dual Bachelor's Master's Degree program (DBMD), inbound study abroad program, and exchange program. Partner university students who come to study at Temple University as part of one of these special cohorts will receive an excellent multidisciplinary education in a culturally diverse campus and city. Studying in a foreign country can be overwhelming for any student; therefore, to help overcome those challenges, Global Programs officers provide personalized attention and assistance to students in these cohorts. Global Programs students also have the opportunity to enroll in additional language training through the Intensive English Language Program (IELP) at Temple University.

Temple University

An urban public research institution founded in 1884, Temple University is a center of excellence in teaching and research with an international presence. The university continues to advance its academic prominence by hiring top faculty and enhancing the profile of its student body. At present, nearly 39,000 students from an ever-broadening geographic area are enrolled at one of the six campuses around Philadelphia—the fifth-largest city in the United States—as well as the university's two international campuses in Tokyo and Rome. Temple is a world-class university dedicated to providing effective and valuable education at every academic level, performing innovative basic and translational research, and growing with and meeting the needs of contemporary students and society.

“I have been extremely impressed with our DBMD students. I normally discourage undergraduates from taking our graduate courses because of the big jump in mathematical sophistication from undergraduate to graduate economics. The DBMD students have made the jump look easy.”

— Michael A. Leeds, PhD
Professor of Economics and Director of Graduate Studies in Economics

Dr. Michael Leeds with DBMD graduate
Futao Lu, from the University of Science and Technology of China in Hefei.

Dual Bachelor's Master's Degree Program (DBMD)

Established in 2008, the Dual Bachelor's Master's Degree program (DBMD) is an accelerated dual-degree program that allows students to receive their bachelor's degrees from their home institution and their master's degrees from Temple University. DBMD applicants are waived from the GRE requirement, except for applicants to the Fox School of Business, who must present either GRE or GMAT scores. DBMD students are eligible for merit scholarships of up to $5,000 per academic year. In addition to other resources available as part of Temple's larger student body, DBMD students benefit from individual attention from both their academic departments and Global Programs officers in the Office of International Affairs.

Global Programs students may combine language and university-level courses in the Intensive English Language Program (IELP) at Temple University.

Three Fox School of Business undergraduate programs—Risk Management and Insurance (No. 6), International Business (No. 9), and Management Information Systems (No. 17)—rank among the best in the nation, according to U.S. News & World Report. The undergraduate business program is No. 56 in the nation.

The Global Living Learning Community at Temple is a program where international students are matched up with domestic students as roommates and occupy one floor of a residence hall. Together they participate in social events and a one credit global citizenship course.

“The United States’ large entertainment industry has acted as a magnet for students like me, interested in exploring film and media arts. My experience at Temple University in Philadelphia and Temple’s Study Away Program in Los Angeles has been amazing. Not only have I learned a lot as a result of my academic studies, but also through life experiences. Thanks to the opportunities offered by Temple, I feel like I have grown up so much as a person in such a short period of time.”
